In my opinion, author's point of view is historically accurate and will always be actual, even nowadays. Charles Dickens probably meant that laziness is a leech to the society and no one ever benefits from it; It's better to "collar", imprison, someone who procrastinates rather than leaving him to be because one will never produce, only consume.

As for me, I actually agree with the author. Someone might say that laziness is the fuel to the Progress, but in reality it's just a time-wasting at home or somewhere in the streets. Procrastinators don't invent, they might have helpful to the society ideas of making life easier but they are too shallow and expect someone else to fulfil these ideas. One who is bound to avoidance to do even own chores is ^{an} idle and backwards person.

Back in ^{the} USSR people who postpone their work, don't pay taxes, and don't even have a job were captured and thrown in jails and concentration GULAG camps to instill them a must to work. It was violent but effective since the prisoners were less hesitant now to get a job even if it's a hard labour.

The procrastination is never good for you. That's what I learned from my personal experience. If you decide to slack-off your home tasks - you won't be able to say even a word on the lesson and eventually get a bad mark.

In conclusion, it's better to do everything in time, never hesitate in your studies or postpone your projects, because "Procrastination is the thief of time, ..." and you don't want to get collared.

I understand the quotation "Procrastination is the thief of time, collar him" as a motivating quotation that you should not be lazy. Being idle steals your time and you should avoid being so. This is just time-wasting. I remember as I've been lazy all the evening, staring into my phone, doing nothing and failed my homework, since I didn't have enough time to finish it. This happens often, so I must repeat: "Avoid being idle" do not hesitate of standing up and working, this is always better to do everything in time. Collar your laziness! Trap it somewhere afar and never come back. Work is life, work is happiness, that's it. Collar the thief of time, since you can do so much with the time he could steal.

I think procrastinating is bad because our world is built on working and inputting effort. You will be late everywhere, will be late ~~in~~ in everything. I am trying working hard, so this will not happen. Every person should know better than wasting their time on something useless. So, there's my conclusion: being lazy gives you bad results, so... just don't be lazy. Famous people were working hard, and if you do, you will be famous too some day. After all, every of us wants to be successful, rich and beautiful, and working in my opinion is a key.
